Dr. Burrell and His Mansion.

DR. L. D. BURRELL.

THE BURRELL MANSION.

MRS. L. D. BURRELL.

We present our readers this week with a picture of the palatial residence of Mr. and Mrs. L. D. Burrell, together good likenesses of both of them. This modern structure is located on a street over-looking the other sections of that city and is a veritable palace in its varied furnishings. It is lighted by both gas and electricity. The electric light on the front porch gives forth a magnificent appearance at night. The building is heated by a hot air furnace and the inside fittings are serviceable and ornamental. The yard is turfed and the walks are gradolithic. The fence is of stone and the painting has been done in a manner that harmonizes admirably with the surroundings. This building was the headquarters of the writer during his stay recently in Roanoke.

Dr. Burrell has a large and profitable practice. He owns the drug-store of which he is the official head and is also the owner of almost the entire block in which his pharmacy and residence are located. His horse and buggy may be seen in the picture. He is a graduate of the Leonard Medical College at Raleigh, N. C. His exact wealth is not known and he is slow in talking upon that subject. His large purchases increase his responsibilities as well as call for more money. He is a typical example for our young men. His wife is accomplished and sociable. She is a lady of rare traits and varied accomplishments. The residence is kept as "neat as a pin," and appearances would indicate that they are always ready to receive company. The cost of this mansion exceeded five thousand dollars.
