THE INSIDE STORY

Seeking Feedback

Engage with our new website Making History: Connect

As anyone who works with the public knows, staying in touch with those you serve is critically important. The more you know and understand about your users' needs, the better positioned you are to adjust your services to meet them. Fortunately, most people are not shy about sharing their thoughts and they welcome opportunities to offer helpful feedback if they believe it will be heard and taken seriously.

The Library of Virginia very much wants to know what you are thinking. What are we doing right? Where is there need for improvement? We also want to know what you find most useful and what you would like us to do more or less of.

To make it easy for the public to weigh in, we recently launched a new website called Making History: Connect (<http://connect.virginiamemory.com>). At the moment, we are soliciting feedback in three areas, but we plan to add others in the near future. To tell us about your experience visiting the Library (either in person or online), using our Virginia Untold: The African American Narrative portal, or participating in our Making History: Transcribe project, just go to the Connect site and sign up for an account. Once registered, you can respond to the quick polls and surveys we have placed under each of these headings. You can also provide us with stories about your experiences and research finds, ask questions, make suggestions, and reply to comments made by other users.

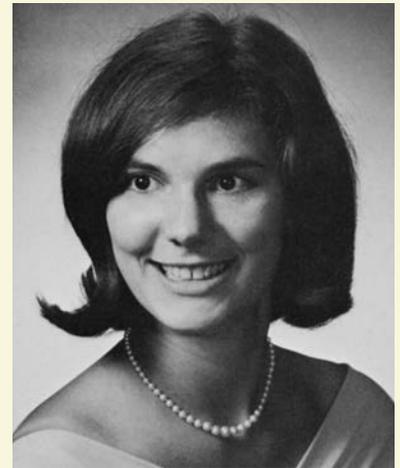

Just as you might strike up a conversation with a staff member or another researcher in the Library's reading rooms, you are now able to engage with them in a new way online. Our hope is that one person's suggestions and insights will spark ideas from others, and in the process we will learn how we might make access to our collections work better for you. There are always risks in asking for honest feedback, but we believe the benefits of engaging with our users far outweigh them.

We still encourage you to chat with us while you are here in the building and to fill out the paper survey cards and suggestion forms. Those are not going away. Our staff is always here to talk with you face-to-face when you visit. So many people are visiting us online and using our digital collections these days, however, that we wanted to offer a convenient way to capture their thoughts and spark virtual interaction. So please sign up for Making History: Connect—did I mention that it's free?—and start talking!

Sincerely,

Sandy Treadway

WE LOVE YEARBOOKS

As a nod to our cover story on the Yearbook Digitization Project, we've replaced the Librarian of Virginia's usual photograph with her senior high school portrait from Echoes, the yearbook of the Academy of Holy Angels, Demarest, New Jersey.

Our hope is that one person's suggestions and insights will spark ideas from others, and in the process we will learn how we might make access to our collections work better for you.

SCHOOL DAYS

Yearbook Digitization Project creates new regional history resource

An old high school yearbook can be a fascinating time capsule of memories, fashions, and cultural trends from the era of its creation. For people researching genealogy or history, however, yearbooks can also serve as valuable regional resources. Thanks to the efforts of the Library of Virginia’s Library Development and Networking Division, you can now browse yearbooks online from high schools across Virginia through the Yearbook Digitization Project, funded by the Library Services and Technology Act. The collection currently includes 1,647 yearbooks from as early as 1912 to as recent as 1977, selected as the stopping point for copyright purposes.

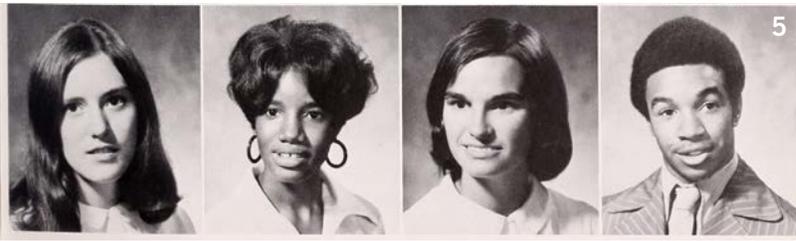

“Yearbooks are popular items at public libraries,” said project coordinator Rose Schooff, a technology consultant in the division. “People look at them for genealogy purposes—and just for fun. But getting handled too much is hard on them. Digitizing yearbooks allows access to the content while helping to preserve the originals.”

The genesis of the project began in 2012 after the division lent scanners and other equipment to several Virginia public libraries and offered guidance to help them digitize their local history collections.

“Getting handled too much is hard on them. Digitizing yearbooks allows access to the content while helping to preserve the originals.”

The Library staff members noticed that high school yearbooks made up the bulk of the scanning, but the libraries didn't have a good way to make them available to the public—and an idea was born. Since then the Library has coordinated the scanning of yearbooks from 29 public libraries as well as its own collections and made them available online through the Internet Archive and the digitization collaborative of Lyrasis, a nonprofit membership organization that works with libraries, archives, and museums. While most of the digitized yearbooks came from existing public library collections, some were donated or lent for scanning by school alumni groups, historical societies, and individuals.

The Orange County African American Historical Society, for example, donated 17 editions of The Hawk, the yearbook of George Washington Carver Regional High School, to Culpeper County Library. In 1946 Culpeper, Madison, Orange, and Rappahannock Counties requested state funds to build a regional high school for African American students in Rapidan, Virginia, an area where black students had limited educational opportunities beyond the seventh grade. Carver High School opened in 1948 and served approximately 2,500 students before closing in 1968, when the state’s public schools were desegregated.

“The yearbooks from older African American schools are a priority for the project,” said Schooff, “because they’re not as easy to find as those from existing and more recent schools.”

The earliest volumes in the project’s collection don’t reflect the classic yearbook style. They’re text-heavy and focus on stories of the local community. By the 1920s and 1930s, however, Virginia’s high school yearbooks evolved to a photograph-heavy format with student portraits, group shots, and coverage of school activities.

“I enjoy seeing the changing fashions and the types of clubs, groups, and sports represented,” said Schooff. “Even the advertisements serve a purpose—you see the history of the local economy. The graphic design evolves also. Some of the early covers are wonderful and the psychedelic themes used in some of the 1970s yearbooks are fun, too. I really like Petersburg’s collections—The Lion from Peabody High School and Petersburg High School’s yearbook, The Missile. Through the years you see them go from segregated to integrated.”

There are a variety of ways to search the collections (libraries, schools, topics, and subjects) and within individual yearbooks you can search by keyword, including people’s names. “We found photos of Moses Malone in the 1974 edition of The Missile from Petersburg High School,” said Schooff about the legendary basketball player (1955–2015) and Virginia native. “You never know what you might find.” ■

FAMILY & COMMUNITY HISTORY

New Partnership with ANCESTRY.COM Provides Free Access to Virginia Records

The Library of Virginia has a new resource available to citizens of Virginia, made possible through a partnership with Ancestry.com. “Ancestry for Virginians” offers Virginians free access to Library of Virginia materials currently hosted by Ancestry.com, a popular subscription-based service for people conducting family history research.

The Library already provides free public access to more than 12 million images made available through nearly 100 separate digital collections. Through this partnership with Ancestry.com, Virginians will have free access to even more materials crucial to furthering knowledge and understanding of their familial relationships and the individual Virginians who collectively shaped the commonwealth we know today.

Included in this initial offering are the Virginia vital records indexed and digitized through a public-private partnership between the Virginia Department of Health and Ancestry.com following the 2012 passage of Senate Bill 660, which supported the digitization, indexing, and public accessibility to birth, death, marriage, and divorce records created since 1912. In Virginia, death, marriage, and divorce data become open public information 25 years after the event and birth data after 100 years. While the indexes to the records have been available since 2015, the commonwealth’s citizens will now have free access through this new resource to digital images of the open records in the following collections:

- Virginia, Birth Records, 1912–2014, Delayed Birth Records, 1854–1911
- Virginia, Death Records, 1912–2014
- Virginia, Marriage Records, 1936–2014
- Virginia, Divorce Records, 1918–2014

Users will access this material through Find It Virginia (www.finditva.com), a collection of databases that provides access to resources such as newspapers, magazine and journal articles, and

Mining the Manuscripts

Library hosts Virginia Foundation for the Humanities Research Fellows

A partnership between the Library of Virginia and the Virginia Foundation for the Humanities allows researchers to examine in-depth the Library's vast manuscript resources during their stay as scholars in residence.

TOM KAPSIDELIS

A longtime journalist in Virginia, Tom Kapsidelis worked in Blacksburg as the editor in charge of the Richmond Times-Dispatch's coverage of the 2007 Virginia Tech shootings. This spring he conducted research on "Higher Aim: Guns, Safety and Healing in the Era of Mass Shootings."

What is one of the most notable things you've found in your research here at the Library?

TK: I've read thousands of e-mails of the Tim Kaine administration that show how the governor and his top staff responded to the aftermath of the shootings at Virginia Tech. Overall, I've been most struck by how the e-mails provide a real-time glimpse of the sorrow, conflicts, and hopes as the government, families, and survivors tried to get at the truth of what happened that awful day, and what each considered to be some measure of justice or accountability. Reading these contemporaneously with the tenth anniversary of the Tech shootings has greatly informed my work.

What will you remember?

TK: After a nearly 40-year career in daily journalism I am in awe of the staff and mission at the Library, and the dedication to seeking the truth at a time when it is under assault. The fact that these resources are freely available, and that there are so many entry points online, shows what a treasure the Library is for the general public, historians, journalists, and educators. As a native Virginian and Richmond resident, it has been an honor to work here for a semester.

I've read thousands of e-mails of the Tim Kaine administration.

THE ERA OF MASS SHOOTINGS

Virginia Foundation for the Humanities Research Fellow Tom Kapsidelis, shown here presenting his research at the Library this spring, is working on a book that examines issues in the aftermath of the 2007 Virginia Tech shootings through the experiences of some of the survivors and others deeply affected by the tragedy.

DOUGLAS WINIARSKI

An associate professor of religious studies at the University of Richmond, Douglas Winiarski researched "Shakers and Jerkers: Radical Revivalism in the Shenandoah Valley and East Tennessee, 1805-1815" during his time here this spring.

What is one of the most notable things you've found in your research here at the Library?

DW: I stumbled upon a fascinating article in the Library's newspaper collections. In a stunning letter published in the Virginia Argus in November 1804, an anonymous Abingdon correspondent described how several participants in a recent revival meeting had been struck with a "perpetual convulsive jerking" in their necks, arms, and legs. Not only did the article explain why the Shaker missionaries that I've been studying elected to travel through Virginia, it also provided one of the earliest and most-detailed descriptions of a remarkable new religious practice that eventually came to be associated negatively with the "holy rollers" of the Holiness and Pentecostal movements later in the century.

What will you remember?

DW: Through informal conversations and weekly Wednesday lunches with Library staff and VFH Fellows, I've gained valuable experience in learning how to research the religious history of the early American frontier. Collaborating with colleagues here at the Library has been one of the most rewarding and transformative experiences of my career.

RADICAL REVIVALISM

Virginia Foundation for the Humanities Research Fellow Douglas Winiarski, shown here presenting his research at the Library this spring, is working on a book that examines the fascinating and troubled relationship between the western Shakers and Tenskwatawa, the notorious Shawnee Prophet and brother of the famed war captain Tecumseh, during the years leading up to the War of 1812.

I stumbled upon a fascinating article in the Library's newspaper collections.

David Baldacci to Receive Literary Lifetime Achievement Award

Each year the Library grants a Literary Lifetime Achievement Award to recognize outstanding and long-lasting contributions to literature by a Virginian. This year's award goes to best-selling author David Baldacci.

A native Virginian, Baldacci has published 33 novels for adults and five works for younger readers. His first book, Absolute Power, was published in 1996. More than 110 million copies of his books are in print in 80 countries worldwide, and are available in 45 languages. Baldacci has three works out or forthcoming in 2017: The Width of the World, The Fix, and End

QUESTIONS FOR DAVID BALDACCI

Does this award have particular meaning for you as a Virginia resident?

I've always been proud of the fact that I'm a native Virginian. Having grown up in Richmond and been educated at VCU and then at UVA, I'm a Virginian through and through. So this award has great significance for me. The Library is near and dear to my heart, and the library system in Virginia is one of the reasons I'm a writer today and receiving this award. I fell in love with books and reading in my youth as a "library rat." That love of books and reading has served me well my whole life.

What inspired you to branch into writing books for young readers?

I loved reading fantasy as a young boy, and it's the ultimate challenge for a writer to create his or her world from nothing but one's imagination. I have two children who have been avid readers their whole lives, and it sparked my desire to create stories that readers of a younger age could dive into and enjoy with the hope that it would spur them on to becoming readers for life.

What motivated you and your wife to create the Wish You Well Foundation to support adult and family literacy?

The world would be a far better place if more people read. I know what having strong literacy skills has meant to me. And I also know what a lack of those skills can mean for people. Reading is the most fundamental skill any of us will ever have. The verbs to think and to read are, in my mind, synonymous; you can hardly do one without the other. The Wish You Well Foundation's core mission is to eradicate illiteracy in this country. That is one of the primary ways we can afford everyone an equal opportunity to achieve their potential in life. I can't think of a worthier goal.

Game. A graduate of Virginia Commonwealth University and the University of Virginia School of Law, Baldacci and his wife, Michelle Baldacci, live in Virginia.

He joins an esteemed list of authors whose contributions to Virginia are unsurpassed. Previous recipients of the Lifetime Achievement Award are Nikki Giovanni (2016), Jan Karon (2015), Barbara Kingsolver (2014), Charles Wright (2013), Tom Robbins (2012), Earl Hamner (2011), Lee Smith (2010), John Grisham (2009), Rita Dove (2008), Tom Wolfe (2007), William Styron (2006), Merrill D. Peterson (2005), George Garrett (2004), Louis D. Rubin Jr. (2003), Lee Settle (2002), Booker T. Washington (2001), Anne Spencer (2000), Edgar Allan Poe (1999), and Ellen Glasgow (1998).

PEOPLE'S CHOICE AWARDS

Sponsored by the Library of Virginia, the People's Choice Awards offer the public the opportunity to participate in choosing popular titles to be recognized at the Annual Library of Virginia Literary Awards, held at the Library on Saturday, October 14, 2017. The winners were chosen by votes from the public, which were cast online or in public libraries throughout Virginia by July 15, 2017.

Summer Reading

Research produces a new approach to Virginia public library summer reading programs

Artwork ©2016 Mike Curato for iREAD, funded by the Institute of Museum and Library Services.

Children and teens in Virginia who participate in public library summer reading programs score significantly higher on all areas of Standards of Learning reading tests than peers who do not participate, according to research commissioned by the Library of Virginia.

This research has helped the Library redesign its approach to the training and materials we provide to public libraries as they transform their summer reading programs into community summer learning programs. The Library partnered with the National Summer Learning Association to provide a high-quality framework for programs and learning opportunities during the summer and encouraged the development of community partners.

With this approach, the Library of Virginia offers a new way to collect, access, and report on summer program activities and their impact on the community. A new software program awards points, e-badges, and incentives for reading and participating in learning activities.

This redesign encourages partnerships at the local and state levels, including a Library of Virginia partnership with the Science Museum of Virginia to expand its outreach using STEM (science, technology, engineering, and math) learning activities, which fit with the theme of the 2017 summer reading program, “Reading by Design.”

The Library has also partnered with the Virginia Department of Conservation and Recreation and the Science Museum of Virginia on a project to encourage children to explore nature and learn science concepts. Nature backpacks containing learning activities can be checked out from public libraries to be used for a free visit to a Virginia State Park. For a list of participating libraries, go to www.lva.virginia.gov/lib-edu/LDND/nature_backpacks.htm.

As a former youth services librarian, I am a huge fan of Young Adult literature and encourage other not-so-young adults to give it a try. I just finished up Overtured by Lamar Giles, who is one of the founding members of We Need Diverse Books, an Edgar Award nominee, and a native Virginian who always packs his work with excitement and well-developed, believable characters. This offering did not disappoint. Overtured is a fast-paced, thrilling, realistic crime drama about a teenager named Nikki who lives in Las Vegas. When her father’s murder conviction is overturned, it throws her world upside down and the reader joins her on a very wild ride to get to the truth.

RARE BOOK COLLECTION

Struggling to earn a living as a writer and as editor of the Richmond-based Southern Literary Messenger, Edgar Allan Poe (1809–1849) eagerly accepted a $50 commission in 1839 to compile a small schoolbook on sea mollusks, The Conchologist's First Book: or, A System of Testaceous Malacology, Arranged Expressly for the Use of Schools.

The year before, Thomas Wyatt had published a lengthy and highly regarded treatise on the same subject, Manual of Conchology. Eager to capture the wider student market, an enterprising Philadelphia company, Haswell, Barrington, and Haswell, decided to issue a similar, but shorter, text compiled from research already collected. To take on the task and to fend off any potential trouble, the printer determined to select a writer of relatively little stature—someone “whom it would be idle to sue for damages.”

Poe wrote a brief preface and introduction, translated a treatise by George Cuvier on the small sea animals, and then filled the remainder of the text with the paraphrased work of several other writers. Poe openly acknowledged his debt to Wyatt, Cuvier, and others, and never implied his work was original, but he was nevertheless vigorously condemned in the press and literary circles for plagiarism. The book itself, however, proved to be a great success as a basic textbook, sold out within two months, and was reprinted in 1840 and 1845. Although The Conchologist's First Book was Poe's only work to be issued in a second edition in his lifetime, he received no royalties. The Library of Virginia is fortunate to possess two copies, one with colored plates.

Prohibition in Virginia, Distilled

Through December 5, 2017

Exhibition Gallery & Lobby

Explore the impact of Prohibition on the Old Dominion. On November 1, 1916, Virginia's breweries and distilleries closed their doors as the state began a grand experiment in Prohibition. From that date until 1933, state inspectors and federal agents attempted to stem the flow of illicit alcohol to a thirsty populace. Newsreels of still-busting raids, music from the Jazz Age, and vintage stills complement the archival record of the exploits of Virginia's Prohibition Commission. Supported in part by the Virginia Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control and the National Alcoholic Beverage Control Association.

Virginia's Forgotten Canneries

Created by the Blue Ridge Institute of Ferrum College, Virginia's Forgotten Canneries documents the home-canning industry developed by local farmers that supplied vegetables and fruits to the commonwealth's increasingly urban population for more than 50 years. The exhibition features colorful and eye-catching labels—on graphic panels as well as on a pyramid of actual cans—many of which were created by the Piedmont Label Company (now Smyth Companies), of Bedford, which donated approximately 10,000 of its pre-1960 labels to the Blue Ridge Institute in 2014.

ADOPTION SUCCESS STORY

EVERGREEN CEMETERY PLANS

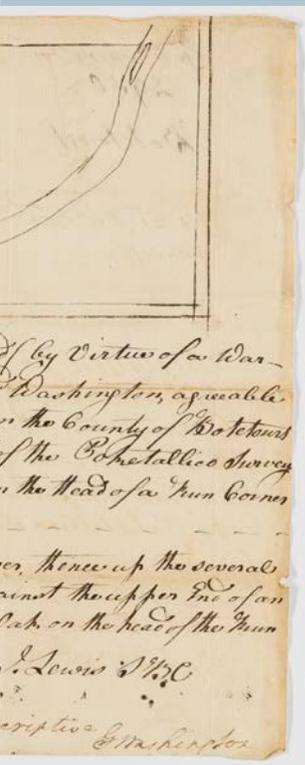

Adopted by the Enrichmond Foundation

Founded in 1891, Richmond's Evergreen Cemetery was one of the region's premier burial grounds for black residents during the height of Jim Crow segregation. Designed by James T. Redd and Sons, it features a geometrical layout with a few lanes curving up the hilly terrain, ultimately covering more than 60 acres. The Enrichmond Foundation—a nonprofit organization that supports communities in Richmond through citizen involvement, education, and fundraising—acquired the cemetery this past May and has donated some of the property's records to the Library of Virginia. The items include 15 volumes containing burial records, interment cards, burial plot sales, annual care journals, and accounting ledgers as well as 11 cemetery plans. The foundation has generously adopted the plans for conservation.

Conservation Treatment: The crumpled and torn plans were stabilized, flattened, cleaned, and mended. The Library's conservator is also working on the cemetery volumes so that all the materials can be organized, cataloged, and duplicated for patron use by later this year.

Conservation Cost: $1,450

Thomas P. Myers Creates Collections Management Fund

Last summer a visitor walked into the Library of Virginia with an idea and a pledge for funding support. Thomas P. Myers, a retired professor and curator of anthropology for the University of Nebraska State Museum and a part-time historian, had attended a Library program and was so impressed by the staff and the institution that he decided to offer a restricted fund for collections management. Broadside recently spoke to Myers about his interest in history and his gift to the Library.

What brought you to the Library of Virginia?

I had been given a ticket to a two-day genealogy conference at the Library a year ago, and I was immediately impressed by the staff of the Library and the institution itself.

Tell us about your interest in our collection.

I'm principally interested in conserving paper history in general and Louisa County history in particular. One day I walked into the Louisa Historical Society to volunteer and executive director Elaine Taylor put me right to work. I serve as the editor of the Historical Society's magazine, and I am looking to publish a book on the history of Louisa County and its role in the context of the larger world. I view county history as the "little history," as opposed to the larger histories of the state and nation. I spend time tracing genealogical connections, which allows me to understand how family relationships affected the development of the county. Of course, family relationships go beyond county lines, which helps to develop a regional picture.

What made you decide to make a gift to the Library?

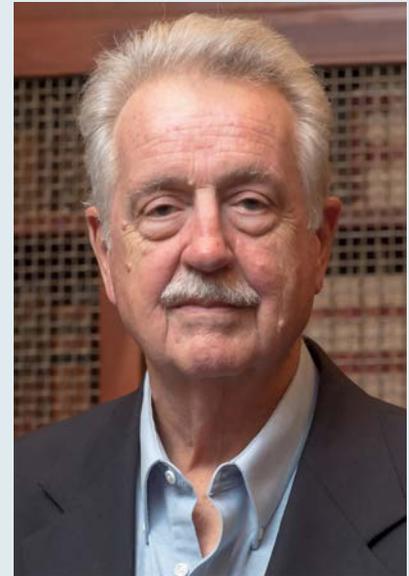

I was so impressed by the scholarship and passion of the Library of Virginia employees. I've spent my life in museum collections, which are so important and must be taken care of. I happened to have some money that I was looking to give to an organization, and after my initial experience, I decided to donate it to the Library.

You chose to support collections management. Tell us about that decision.

The collections world is where I come from, and I know that backroom activities don't always get the attention they deserve. I wanted to ensure that the staff of the Library had funding to use in taking care of its collections.

What message would you have for others considering a donation to the Library?

History is important, and the Library of Virginia is doing a great job. Its projects are crucial to preserving the history of Virginia and giving citizens accessibility to the collections.
