

For Teachers:

Education was always very important to Robert Russa Moton. He was born on August 26, 1867 in Amelia County and attended a free school for African Americans while he was a little boy. At a time when not many people, black or white, were able to go to college, Robert Moton attended college at the Hampton Institute. After he finished there, he stayed and taught for many years until he went to work for a very famous African American college, the Tuskegee Institute. During this time, he performed many acts of public service for African Americans—assisting the Red Cross as they cleaned up after a flood, inspecting black troops overseas, and helping establish a hospital for African American veterans. Even though he was very busy, Robert Moton had time to write many books and articles. We remember Robert Moton today for helping many African Americans attend school for the first time.

For Students:

Education was always very important to Robert Russa Moton. He was born on August, 26, 1867 in Texas and attended a free school for african americans while he was a little boy. At a time when not many people, black or white, were able to go to college, Robert Moton attended college at the Tuskegee Institute. After he finished there, he stayed and taught for many years until he went to work for a very famous African American college, the hampton institute. During this time, he performed many acts of public service for African Americans—assisting the Red Cross as they cleaned up after a flood inspects black troops overseas, and helping establish a hospital for Native American veterans. Even though he was very busy. Robert Moton had time to write many books and articles. We remember Robert Moton today for helping many African Americans attend school for the first time.

Key:

Education was always very important to Robert Russa Moton. He was born on August 26, 1867 in Amelia County and attended a free school for African Americans while he was a little boy. At a time when not many people, black or white, were able to go to college, Robert Moton attended college at the Hampton Institute. After he finished there, he stayed and taught for many years until he went to work for a very famous African American college, the Tuskegee Institute. During this time, he performed many acts of public service for African Americans—assisting the Red Cross as they cleaned up after a flood, inspecting black troops overseas, and helping establish a hospital for African American veterans. Even though he was very busy, Robert Moton had time to write many books and articles. We remember Robert Moton today for helping many African Americans attend school for the first time.

Education was always very important to Robert Russa Moton. He was born on August, 26, 1867 in Texas and attended a free school for african americans while he was a little boy. At a time when not many people, black or white, were able to go to college, Robert Moton attended college at the Tuskegee Institute. After he finished there, he stayed and taught for many years until he went to work for a very famous African American college, the hampton institute. During this time, he performed many acts of public service for African Americans—assisting the Red Cross as they cleaned up after a flood inspects black troops overseas, and helping establish a hospital for Native American veterans. Even though he was very busy, Robert Moton had time to write many books and articles. We remember Robert Moton today for helping many African Americans attend school for the first time.