

For Teachers:

Xavier Richardson thinks that education is important for everyone to have, and he frequently volunteers his time to make sure that everyone can get it. Xavier Richardson graduated from high school in 1975 and went to college, but through his education at Princeton University and Harvard Business School, he began to notice that not everyone was able to get the education he did. He took a job on Wall Street and began volunteering through his church to help high school students go to college. Coming back to Fredericksburg in the 1980s, he helped form the Partnership for Academic Excellence to help African American students with SAT preparation, college applications, and mentoring programs. Xavier Richardson also helps many other causes with his community service. He has volunteered with the Rotary Club, the March of Dimes, and the Virginia Nature Conservancy. In 2008, the Commonwealth of Virginia commended him for his work. Xavier Richardson was able to achieve a great education and we recognize him for coming back to his community to help others follow in his footsteps.

For Students:

Xavier Richardson thinks that education is important for everyone to have, and he frequently volunteered his time to make sure that everyone can get it. Xavier Richardson graduates from high school in 1775 and went to college, but through his education at Princeton University and Harvard Business School, he began to notice that not everyone was able to get the education he did. He took a job on wall street and began volunteering through his church to help high school students go to college. Coming back to Fredericksburg in the 1980's, he helped form the Partnership for Academic Excellence. To help African American students with SAT preparation, college applications, and mentoring programs. Xavier Richardson also helps many other causes with his community-service. He has volunteered with the Rotary Club the March of Dimes, and the Virginia Nature Conservancy. In 2008, the State of Virginia commended him for his work. Xavier Richardson was able to achieve a great education and we recognize him for coming back to his community to help others follow in his footsteps.

Key:

Xavier Richardson thinks that education is important for everyone to have, and he frequently volunteers his time to make sure that everyone can get it. Xavier Richardson graduated from high school in 1975 and went to college, but through his education at Princeton University and Harvard Business School, he began to notice that not everyone was able to get the education he did. He took a job on Wall Street and began volunteering through his church to help high school students go to college. Coming back to Fredericksburg in the 1980s, he helped form the Partnership for Academic Excellence to help African American students with SAT preparation, college applications, and mentoring programs. Xavier Richardson also helps many other causes with his community service. He has volunteered with the Rotary Club, the March of Dimes, and the Virginia Nature Conservancy. In 2008, the Commonwealth of Virginia commended him for his work. Xavier Richardson was able to achieve a great education and we recognize him for coming back to his community to help others follow in his footsteps.

Xavier Richardson thinks that education is important for everyone to have, and he frequently volunteered his time to make sure that everyone can get it. Xavier Richardson graduates from high school in 1775 and went to college, but through his education at Princeton University and Harvard Business School, he began to notice that not everyone was able to get the education he did. He took a job on wall street and began volunteering through his church to help high school students go to college. Coming back to Fredericksburg in the 1980's, he helped form the Partnership for Academic Excellence. To help African American students with SAT preparation, college applications, and mentoring programs. Xavier Richardson also helps many other causes with his community-service. He has volunteered with the Rotary Club the March of Dimes, and the Virginia Nature Conservancy. In 2008, the State of Virginia commended him for his work. Xavier Richardson was able to achieve a great education and we recognize him for coming back to his community to help others follow in his footsteps.